 3. Yes, I am aware that AI tools are around, and it is possible to be dishonest about it. However, I have my ways to trace a “honest” response and reward them. If you wish to be dishonest by default, my sage advice is - don’t take the pain of copying for nothing! Few honest words from your understanding are more valuable here than a “polished” comprehensive “artificial” answer.

Q1. Ayurveda states that health is balance and not merely the absence of disease. Contrast this view with one commonly accepted modern health assumption, and explain how the Ayurvedic view leads to a different understanding of prevention and well-being. Use one concrete example.

Q2. Ayurveda treats time (kāla) as an active factor in disease formation. Explain how speed and constant acceleration can create disease even when diet and exercise appear ideal.

Q3. A student reports that all medical tests are normal, they eat a balanced diet, and exercise regularly, yet they feel chronically tired, irritable, and sleep poorly. From an Ayurvedic perspective, explain why this situation is not contradictory. Identify two possible root causes that modern diagnostics may overlook, and suggest one non-pharmaceutical corrective principle.

Q4. Explain why Ayurveda considers symptoms as messages rather than enemies. Using one common symptom as an example, show how suppressing it may provide relief but not healing.

Q5. State any one Ayurvedic principle or statement discussed in class that directly challenges modern lifestyle practices. Explain its relevance using one contemporary situation.
